APICULTURE CITADINE

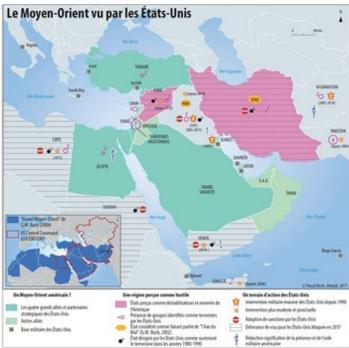

La production de miel dans les milieux urbains est une activité en plein essor. Quantité de jardins communautaires sont présents en ville. Pour polliniser ces jardins, les abeilles sont très efficaces, d'où le grand intérêt qu'elles suscitent. Qui plus est, la variété et la quantité des sources florales (ex : parcs, plates-bandes, jardinières, etc.) sont autant de sources de pollen et de nectar qui sont à la portée des abeilles tout au long de la saison estivale, et ce, dans un environnement où l'utilisation de pesticides est minimale. Partout dans le monde, l'on observe ce mouvement en faveur de l'apiculture citadine et beaucoup de ruches urbaines sont déjà installées et exploitées dans les grandes villes, notamment à New York, à Hong Kong et à Paris.

Se consacrer à l'apiculture en ville...

Les abeilles sont généralement dociles, mais peuvent piquer! En milieu urbain, il faut donc agir de façon responsable en installant ses ruches et ne pas créer de problème avec le voisinage. Pour avoir du succès, il est important de bien se renseigner sur le sujet en acquérant des connaissances de base sur la biologie de l'abeille et sur la gestion d'une colonie. Suivre une formation sur l'apiculture peut être très utile et profitable, tout comme se joindre à une organisation apicole locale.
